National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders (ANAD) assists in the formation of chapters and self-help groups so that victims and their families may meet others with similar problems. ANAD's eating disorder support groups provide a free, virtual space where people can come together and find community in recovery.

Our support groups are led by trained volunteers who have recovered from their own eating disorder, or volunteer professionals in the eating disorder field. Support groups are open to anyone, at any stage of their recovery journey. They are not a replacement for therapy, but serve as another recovery resource.
